December's NYC*BUG Holiday Meeting
Your Unix Tips as Community Gifts

Last December's meeting featured an array of speakers presenting their day-to-day tips in a single presentation slide.

These tips were products of utilizing Unix as a toolkit. It might be about simple scripts or under-used commands that could be helpful to others.

This year, we're going to repeat the success.

Got a small hack or two that saves you a few minutes a day?

Maybe there's even a hack that saved your job.

We all have hacks we've learned over the years as we use and expand our Unix toolbox. It's time to give your tips back to the community. Make it a giving holiday season.

Think about piping RAID status to logger, so that your /var/log/messages keeps you informed.

Or maybe ending a script with '&& mail -s "script complete" root' so you know when that large sloppy Perl script you wrote is finished.

We all have them, now it's time to share them.

Go the NYCBUG.org web site and select the "Add Content" tab. Select "I want to give a meeting" as the "type of submission," and we can get you on the roster.

Prior speaking experience not a requirement. As a matter of fact, we encourage those who haven't spoken before to submit.

www.nycbug.org
Wednesday, December 1, 2010
6:45 PM
Suspenders Restaurant backroom
111 Broadway, just above Wall Street, Manhattan